Bumping Into Your Property

Bumping Into Your Property

Lock Bumping is a term that many of us, will not be too familiar with. So what does it mean? Well, for the uninitiated, it is a term applied to a method that allows access to property, by manipulating the lock. The lock is manipulated in such a way, that unauthorised access is given to the property, leaving no damage to the lock.

More concerning, is the fact that where valuables are taken, there is no sign of 'break and enter'. In a scenario like this, you are going to have to work very hard to prove the case! What you are now reporting as stolen, was in fact there in the first place. Insurance companies and the authorities, will be wanting details on any signs of, 'break and enter' and proof of ownership. Without these details, you may find yourself feeling, as if you are being accused of a fraudulent activity.

Bumping Into Your Property

Lock Bumping, Bump Keying, Bumping Method are all terms used to describe this technique of opening a regular pin tumbler lock. The method uses a specially modified key, that can open most locks of this type. This technique of opening the tumbler lock has been known for sometime, but recently has become more commonly known about, after information was posted on the internet.

Remember There Is No Evidence Of Damage To The Lock!

In Australia the majority of pin tumbler locks, use only thirty different key profiles!

Australian lock manufacturers, have been working on ways to eliminate the technique, by creating new styles of locks and tumblers.

So How Can You Protect Your Home & Family?

Firstly calling the insurance supplier is a good start, to see what procedures they have in place to assist, if it happened to your property. Secondly, if there is no evidence of 'break and enter' in this same scenario, then you are going to be asked for documentation. Of the reported stolen items, to prove ownership and prior existence. Therefore creating a Home Inventory where your property and contents are recorded and documented is an excellent idea. You will have the information needed, before the risk of loss occurs. This procedure is becoming more common these days, due to losses by Natural Disaster, which are on the increase and becoming more severe. It makes common sense, as this is the proof you need when asked for by the Insurance Company or Authorities. Photographic evidence provides proof of ownership and presence, and can be easily be date stamped during creation.

Lastly, a call to the locksmith is a good idea, to make sure you are aware of whether your locks are vulnerable, to 'Lock Bumping'.
